ALM is a broader perspective than the Software Development Life Cycle (SDLC), which is limited to the phases of software development such as requirements, design, coding, testing, configuration, project management, and change management. ALM continues after development until the application is no longer used, and may span many SDLCs.

As an ALM best practice, managed solutions should be generated by exporting an unmanaged solution as managed and considered a build artifact. Additionally: You can't edit components directly within a managed solution. To edit managed components, first add them to an unmanaged solution. When you do this, you create a dependency between your unmanaged customizations and the managed solution ...
