We will not know more until the court martial runs its course, and we may not know everything even then. The assessment has just begun. Meanwhile in the US the American Civil Liberties Union recently released another report listing various cases of torture and abuse, some already investigated and others, often involving the Special Forces, perhaps yet to be explored or convincingly resolved.

It is a familiar experience for parents and a cultural clich  for everyone else. At the beginning of a long journey, and having barely turned the corner of one's own street, the children are already wanting to know: "Are we there yet?"; their sense of intense anticipation destroying what little comprehension they may otherwise have of the complexities of time's unfolding.
