In working together to create Chagall's original lithographs, Marc Chagall and Charles Sorlier developed a methodical procedure. Chagall would draw a composition in black on stone, zinc, or transfer paper, creating the general outline of the work. After printing a few proofs, Chagall would then add color in water color or pastel.

In 1960, the Russian artist Marc Chagall (1887 - 1985) began creating a series of 12 stained glass windows for the synagogue of Hebrew University's Hadassah Medical Center in Jerusalem. The windows symbolized the 12 tribes of Israel who were blessed by Jacob and Moses in the verses that conclude Genesis and Deuteronomy. Chagall envisaged the windows as "jewels of translucent fire," aided in part by a special process his assistant developed for applying color to the glass that allowed Chagall to use as many as three colors on a single pane, rather than using the traditional technique of separating each colored pane by a lead strip.
