Carrie Tiffany spent her childhood at first in London and then in a Perth suburb in the seventies. Yet in Mateship with Birds Tiffany recreates dairy farming in the fifties exactly as I remember it: the ubiquity of cows, the Baltic Simplex milking machine that was always breaking down, the twice daily milking: "The first cow brings back the feeling in his fingers."

Mateship with Birds by Carrie Tiffany. This is a book beautifully written which evokes perfectly and unsentimentally life in the repressed 1950s in Victoria, Australia. The play on words "Mateship" and "Birds" was obvious from the beginning and the interwoven stories of Harry and Betty, and the kookaburras was masterful.

Carrie Tiffany: MATESHIP WITH BIRDS | Daily Mail Online

August, 2013. Carrie Tiffany's inaugural Stella Prize-winning novel, Mateship with Birds, is set in the 1950s around Cohuna, a town in northern Victoria, and named after a 1922 book of bird notes by Australian writer Alec Chisholm. Both in this novel and in her first, award-winning book Everyman's Rules for Scientific Living, Tiffany re-creates historical periods through invoking the everyday publications - the guides, manuals, newspapers and magazines - of the age.
