Ryder (1928) is the first novel by Djuna Barnes. A composite of different literary styles, from lyrical poetry to sentimental fiction, it is an example of a modernist novel in the Rabelaisian tradition of bawdy and parodic fiction. Nearly every chapter is written in a different style. The novel is thought to draw on elements of Barnes's own life.

The great literary eccentric Djuna Barnes, beloved by (amongst other major literary figures) T.S. Eliot, is best known for her neo-Jacobean literary works, the novel "Nightwood" and the play "Antiphon." Although I have immense fondness for the novel "Nightwood," I think that her novel "Ryder" is her absolute masterpiece.
