"A Short Poem on Sunflower" That little something on the ground, No idea where it belongs, Steadily opens its flower, As if the flower was a sun on the Earth. Who follows the upper sun's ways, When it gets dark, It closes itself so it can hide from the dark rays. It is a flower no ordinary flower, but just a sunflower. (By Sarah Shahzad)

Then, Sunflower, peep over the fences
And cover the hillsides with gold,
And out in the cornfields, if tempted,
Again take thy claim as of old;
Salute, too, and nod to the stranger,
Who travels the dusty highway,
He'll worship the sun crown you're wearing
And love you for brightening his way.
So, Sunflower, grow tall in the meadow
