This book contains an investigation of workplace violence experienced by staff nurses in a selected private hospital in Manado, Indonesia. Likewise, it tried to describe the relationship of the participants' selected demographic profile to the extent of workplace violence experienced. All the staff nurses in the selected hospitals were surveyed as to the type and extent of violence experienced in the workplace. Results showed that 63% of the 93 staff nurses experienced verbal abuse as a form of psychological violence. Nobody experienced verbal abuse more alert and watchful as deterrents to such abusive actions. Participants who had not experienced workplace violence disclosed they would resort

Modern multigenerational nursing cohorts come with their own unique challenges, but they can also be leveraged to retain staff and increase organizational effectiveness. The key, according to organizational psychology practitioner Dr. April L. Jones, PhD, is to identify and work with each generation's unique values and work ethic. Nurse Commitment is the result of an extensive six-year organizational psychology study, published in the January 2015 issue of the Journal of Nurse Management and as a doctoral dissertation in the December 2014 issue of ProQuest.

After examining the affective commitment of registered nurses in the baby boomer generation, Jones realized their commitment could be utilized to retain nurses from different generational cohorts, creating cross-generational ties and a robust organizational employee-development program. Retaining nurses is a major issue for health care organizations, resulting in unnecessary costs, poor work performance, and a loss of patient safety. Jones's comprehensive and holistic approach focuses on the importance of a team approach to multigenerational and multicultural nursing cohorts. While tailored specifically to nursing, Jones's methodology, research, and content applies to staffing matrixes across the health care environment and in other

Hospitals and nursing homes are responding to changes in the health care system by modifying staffing levels and the mix of nursing personnel. But do these changes endanger the quality of patient care? Do nursing staff suffer increased rates of injury, illness, or stress because of changing workplace demands? These questions are addressed in Nursing Staff in Hospitals and Nursing Homes, a thorough and authoritative look at today's health care system that also takes a long-term view of staffing needs for nursing as the nation moves into the next century. The committee draws fundamental conclusions about the evolving role of nurses in hospitals and nursing homes and presents recommendations about staffing decisions, nursing training, measurement of quality, reimbursement, and other areas. The volume also discusses work-related injuries, violence toward and abuse of nursing staffs, and stress among nursing personnel--and examines whether these problems are related to staffing levels. Included is a readable overview of the underlying trends in health care that have given rise to urgent questions about nurse staffing: population changes, budget pressures, and the introduction of new technologies. Nursing Staff in Hospitals and Nursing Homes provides a straightforward examination of complex and sensitive issues surround the role and value of nursing on our health care system.

The Future of Nursing explores how nurses' roles, responsibilities, and education should change significantly to meet the increased demand for care that will be created by health care reform and to advance improvements in America's increasingly complex health system. At more than 3 million in number, nurses make up the single largest segment of the health care work force. They also spend the greatest amount of time in delivering patient care as a profession. Nurses therefore have valuable insights and unique abilities to contribute as partners with other health care professionals in improving the quality and safety of care as envisioned in the Affordable Care Act (ACA) enacted this year. Nurses should be fully engaged with other health professionals and assume leadership roles in redesigning care in the United States. To ensure its members are well-prepared, the profession should institute residency training for nurses, increase the percentage of nurses who attain a bachelor's degree to 80 percent by 2020, and double the number who pursue doctorates. Furthermore, regulatory and institutional obstacles -- including limits on nurses' scope of practice -- should be removed so that the health system can reap the full benefit of nurses' training, skills, and knowledge in patient care. In this book, the Institute of Medicine makes recommendations for an action-oriented blueprint for the future of

The purpose of this descriptive quantitative study is to investigate the perceptions of staff nurses about practical nursing students in an acute care setting. The setting is a 25-bed critical access rural, central Minnesota hospital. Participants included staff nurses who work with practical nursing students in clinical rotation at the hospital. The theoretical framework utilized for this research is Patricia Benner's From Novice to Expert (Benner, Tanner, & Chesla, 2009). In the clinical setting, the staff nurse has a strong position of influence in nursing education. Through better understanding of staff nurses' perspectives and attitudes toward practical nursing students, the nurse educator can better plan, develop and coordinate ideal learning experiences (Jackson & Neighbors, 1988). The 54-item Nursing Students' Contribution to Clinical Agencies instrument developed by Patsdaughter, Medici, and Gatson-Grindel (2003) was used to collect and organize data on the staff nurses' perception. The research study findings suggest that staff nurses perception of working with practical nursing students in the acute care setting overall were positive. The results of this research determined that there were differences in the perceptions of practical nursing students and contribution to patient care varying on their self-identified rating on Benner's Model--novice, advanced
