The Two Puddings in th 60's At the end of the last century, changes in the law required breweries to sell off many of their pubs and the Two Puddings changed hands, resulting in a controversy over discounts offered to publicans and a court case that saw Eddie

Both me and my husband went to the Two Puddings in the sixties before we knew one another and then as a couple, we married in 1969. I knew my Dad's family had something to do with the Two Puddings but it wasn't until I started to delve into it more deeply that I found that William J. Davis and wife Clara were the 'publicans' and in fact my great grandparents so you can imagine I am enjoying

THE TWO PUDDINGS. At the heart of Stratford Broadway, the Two Puddings was an iconic pub which over many decades attracted a wide range of customers from Stratford, West Ham, Canning Town, the East End and beyond. It was known for rowdy camaraderie, its loud live music, its dancefloor upstairs, and the wide mix of its clientele. In the 1940s and 50s, it had a reputation for violence, and was known as "The Butcher's
