Synopsis: The Minstrel introduces the town (Shopping Day) and Justus Shoemaker, a hard-working, ethical, and kind town shoemaker. Justus tries to sell his shoes (I've Got Shoes to Sell, Everybody), but everyone still has his well-made shoes previously purchased. Sydney Charles, a good friend, suggests that Justus's firm belief in craftsmanship, his ideals, and his solid (though a bit boring), "dependable" shoes may not be the most profitable way to feed one's family.
