Polish writer, conveying not only the fantastic lightness of her touch but the entire worlds she manages to pack into, as it were, a grain of sand. Miniscule wonders are her specialty, such as the tableau she records in "Miracle Fair": "The usual miracle: / invisible dogs barking / in the dead of night.

The title poem, "View with a Grain of Sand", is about how meaningless

we are to the non-

human world around us, despite our belief in our importance, and how our naming means

nothing to the named.

We call it a grain of sand, but it calls itself neither grain nor sand. It

Grain Of Sand
really makes you think.

That is what it did for me, anyway. The central idea in the poem – that everything is relative – is something that we as humans often don't reflect upon, something we forget. The poem presents the thought that, without people to give meaning to inanimate objects, they would not be important.
